Master of bygone civility, Bush is hailed at funeral as U.S. 'soldier-statesman'

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Former President George H.W. Bush was hailed at his state funeral on Wednesday as a warrior-statesman of uncommon personal kindness who went from being a hero of American conflicts to representing a bygone era of civility in politics.

Amid an unusual bipartisan spirit at the service at the Washington National Cathedral, both Republican and Democratic politicians honored a president who called for a "kinder, gentler" nation. Bush, the 41st U.S. president, died last week in Texas aged 94. He occupied the White House from 1989 to 1993, navigating the collapse of the Soviet Union and expelling former Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's forces from oil-rich Kuwait.

"George H.W. Bush was America's last great soldier-statesman," Jon Meacham, a presidential biographer, said in a eulogy. "He stood in the breach in the Cold War against totalitarianism. He stood in the breach in Washington against unthinking partisanship," he said.

At a ceremony full of pomp but also peppered with laughter, the capital's current political feuds were briefly set aside in honor of the late president, a naval aviator who survived being shot down by Japanese forces over the Pacific Ocean in World War Two, and a former head of the CIA during the Cold War.

Still, there were reminders of lingering tensions.

President Donald Trump shook hands with his predecessor, Barack Obama, and former first lady Michelle Obama. But he made no attempt to greet the other two former Democratic presidents, Bill Clinton and Jimmy Carter, sharing the front pew, or their spouses, including Hillary Clinton, Trump's 2016 election opponent.

A patrician figure, Bush was voted out of office in part for failing to connect with ordinary Americans during an economic recession.

But he has been remembered as representing an earlier era of civility in American politics, an image burnished in recent years by the divisiveness and anger in the United States that accompanied the rise of Trump.

Tariff effects broaden across U.S., wage growth higher: Fed

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Tariff-driven price increases have spread more broadly through the U.S. economy, though on balance inflation has risen at a modest pace in most parts of the country, the Federal Reserve said on Wednesday in its latest report on the economy.

The U.S. central bank's "Beige Book" report, a snapshot of the economy gleaned from discussions with business contacts in the Fed's 12 districts in the weeks through November 26, also said that the economy appeared to be growing modestly to moderately.

While a wide range of businesses cited concerns about the effects of a trade war between the United States and China, firms continued to hire and reported bumping up benefits and pay to compete for an increasingly scarce labor pool. Labor markets tightened across a broad range of industries, and wage growth "tended to the higher side of a modest to moderate pace," the Fed said.

In the Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank's district, "labor availability was widely seen as the biggest obstacle to short-term growth," according to the Beige Book.

The dollar held onto slim gains after the report was released.

The Fed is widely expected to raise interest rates at the close of its Dec. 18-19 policy meeting. Policymakers have said the United States' strong economy could stoke higher inflation if they do not raise borrowing costs further.

At the same time, Fed Chairman Jerome Powell has signaled the Fed's three-year tightening cycle is drawing to a close and central bankers are looking for signs a global growth slowdown and a U.S.-China trade war might be weighing on the U.S. economy. The Beige Book report highlighted the developing risks that Fed officials have begun citing more frequently as they plan how far to continue their rate increase cycle.

Plane bearing George H.W. Bush heads to Houston

The Washington segments of George H.W. Bush's state funeral continued outside the National Cathedral with a departure ceremony, one of the half-dozen formal events in the nation's capital since Monday. With Bush's family trailing behind, pall bearers carried Bush's casket to the black hearse bearing the presidential seal as a military band played "Hail to the Chief."

At 12:20 Houston time, the door to the hearse was closed. Eight minutes later, the motorcade began its journey to Joint Base Andrews in Maryland, for another ceremony prior to the flight to Ellington Field in Houston for ongoing events honoring the 41st president.

At 12:54, the motorcade bearing the president's hearse arrived at Joint Base Andrews.

On HoustonChronicle.com: Full coverage of former President George H.W. Bush

At 1:05, with the president's family looking on, Bush's casket was removed from the hearse, followed by a U.S. Army 21-gun salute.

In the departure ceremony, pall bearers representing the branches of the military carried Bush's casket to the plane as a military band played Antonin Dvorak's Goin' Home. The Bush family began boarding the 747 that bears the name Air Force One about five minutes after the 21-gun salute. George W. Bush turned to give a slight wave as he entered the aircraft.

The plane began taxiing at 1:23, lifting off 1:26 from the airfield Bush used dozens of times for his return to Texas.

People turned out by the thousands to pay their respects during Bush's final trip to the nation's capital, where he became a revered global leader as president and, before that, vice president.

In Bush's 35 hours lying in state in the Capitol Rotunda, 42,000 people came to pass by the casket.

Imagine looking at a screen for two seconds and then check in for your flight? Then you glance at a screen for another two seconds to drop off your bags at a luggage station? How easy would it be to merely look at another screen to breeze through ID checks at TSA security checkpoints or the departure gate? All this, without having to use your passport.

Now all this is reality. Atlanta's Hartsfield Jackson International Airport and Delta Air Lines have opened the nation's first curb-to-gate biometric terminal, which promises to improve aviation security while moving travelers faster through screening.

"Atlanta airport -- the busiest airport in the world, our largest hub -- is the first airport in the US to roll this out," Delta Chief Operating Officer Gil West told CNN at the terminal's opening on November 29. "It saves nine minutes on the ground for the boarding process which is time that our customers won't be spending in lines waiting to board the aircraft."

The biometric ID technology being used here is facial recognition. It's a camera-based system that compares scans of travelers' faces to a database of verified ID photos curated by US Customs and Border Protection (CBP).

Passengers use a facial recognition screen to verify their identities before boarding a Delta Air Lines flight from Atlanta to Mexico City on Thursday.

USA's 'First Biometric Terminal' In Operation At Atlanta Airport

Compiled And Edited By John T. Robbins, Southern Daily Editor

Delta's competitors -- including JetBlue, American Airlines and Southwest Airlines -- have started pilot facial recognition programs at a handful of US airports for international boarding. But so far, Delta says Atlanta is the only airport to also offer biometrics for check-in, luggage and TSA ID checks.

CBP says America's air travel industry is on a path toward widespread adoption of facial recognition verification at all US airports with international flights and eventually, say industry leaders, domestic flights too.

It's the "next leap in airport security," says Matt Cornelius, vice president of Airports Council International, North America. Although Cornelius is confident in the technology and it "continues to evolve very rapidly," he says it "still has a lot of development to go."

It's more secure
Using the system is totally optional. Passengers who don't feel comfortable using it can opt to go through traditional ID verification using their passports. Privacy groups say they're worried facial recognition databases are subject to limited accountability and vulnerable to government abuse or lack of oversight.

Experts and authorities believe biometric ID technology will make airports and air travel safer in an era when aviation is targeted by criminals and terrorists.

"Facial recognition is much better from a security perspective than a paper, barcode scan," said John Selden, Atlanta airport's new general manager who spent four years as deputy general manager at New York's JFK International Airport. "This technology is leading the way in improving security."

Your face can be your passport
In a nutshell, here's how it works: If you're unfamiliar, facial recognition technology uses a complex algorithm that recognizes each person's unique facial characteristics -- including shapes of eyes, noses, mouths, proportional relationships and other factors.

Delta Air Lines offers customers in Atlanta the option of using facial recognition technology to check in for international flights.

-- Passengers enter their passport numbers into their frequent flier airline profiles.

-- Check in to your flight at one of several kiosks in the international terminal by pressing a touch-screen tab labeled "LOOK: Facial Recognition" and looking into the screen. The image is compared to the image on file in the CBP database.

-- Drop your luggage at the nearby airline baggage drop station by looking into a camera.

-- At the TSA screening area, look into a scanner screen and show your boarding pass. No need to pull out your passport or driver's license.

A typical stop at a TSA ID check station can take 11-20 seconds. With this -- in less than three seconds -- boom, you're cleared to continue on through the TSA passenger and carry-on baggage screening lanes.

Next year at Atlanta's international terminal, TSA plans to use facial recognition so participating travelers won't have to show a boarding pass either.

It has a 98% success rate
Finally, at your departure gate, instead of having to pull out your passport before you board your international flight, just briefly stare into a screen set up at the jetway entrance. In 2 seconds, you're cleared and bouncing down the jetway to your seat. An airline gate agent is staffing the screen to take care of any technical hiccups.

Yep, once in a while, the screen doesn't recognize a face.

In fact, about 1% or 2% of the time, face scans aren't able to verify passengers, said John Wagner, CBP deputy assistant commissioner. He blames that on bad scan images -- poor lighting conditions, for example. "If you do get rejected, all you do is present your passport and your boarding pass."

TSA facial recognition screens are now available for biometric ID verification at Atlanta Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport.

Wagner says the technology will be continually improved with a goal of 100% effectiveness.

When it does work, the CBP's facial recognition database can help authorities nab travelers who use false passports. Recently three airline passengers at Washington's Dulles International Airport were caught over a period of 40 days, according to CBP.

Privacy questions
When authorities have your facial image in a database, you're giving up control over how the government can use it, said Jeramie Scott at the Electronic Privacy Information Center, a Washington-based organization aimed at protecting privacy. The CBP says facial images of US citizens scanned at airports are deleted from their database shortly after confirmation. Facial images of non-citizens who arrive in the US are stored for 75 years, the CBP website says, and departure photos of non-citizens are deleted after 14 days.

Biometric facial recognition cameras have been installed at Delta Air Lines' baggage drop station at Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta International Airport.

Delta's West said the airline never has control of the CBP database -- "only the ability to access it to verify identity."

Privacy advocates are calling on lawmakers to create legal safeguards to prevent the abuse of these kinds of databases. As for passengers, Keary King of Dothan, Alabama, said he was willing to try the CBP system. "We have no privacy concerns," he said, waiting with his family to board Delta Flight 365 to Mexico City.

"Maybe it makes the boarding a little quicker," King said. "That would be good, not only for me but for all the passengers." Most of the flight's 124 passengers who originated in Atlanta used the facial scanner and boarded the Boeing 737-700 on time in about 10 minutes. Only a few had to show their passports because the system rejected their scanned images.

It's expanding to other airports
Outside the US, airports such as Singapore's Changi, Amsterdam's Schiphol and Aruba International Airport reportedly already offer biometric check-in and boarding capability at some gates and terminals.

Airports in Japan reportedly are rolling out facial recognition boarding facilities at several airports this year. China's Hongqiao International Airport is also using facial recognition for security screening, according to The Independent, and is in the process of expanding to a full curb-to-gate facial recognition system. London's Heathrow plans to start testing an end-to-end facial recognition program next year.

Meanwhile, Delta is expanding its biometric program. "We'll look to scale this at all our hubs internationally, and aspirationally, throughout our entire operations," West said, implying the addition of US domestic travelers. Delta plans to kickoff a facial recognition option for customers flying internationally out of Detroit in mid-December.

Passengers should always have the ability to opt out of any facial recognition system, Cornelius said.

Full implementation is "a number of years away," Cornelius said. Wagner said the CBP hopes to have facial recognition boarding at all US airports serving international flights within 3 or 4 years.

Right now, airports' main concern is getting these systems up to speed, Cornelius said.

If all goes as planned, airports believe facial recognition can reduce those annoying bottlenecks at security lines and make air travel safer for all of us. (Courtesy cnn.com)

The World Health Organization has recognized "gaming disorder" as a diagnosable condition.

But the organization's decision to include the new term in the 11th edition of its International Classification of Diseases (ICD), which it released Monday, has sparked controversy among psychiatric experts who question whether there's enough research to call it a true disorder. According to the American Psychological Association, an estimated 160 million American adults play video games, but the percentage of people that could qualify for the disorder is extremely small. Players' ages range from under 18 to over 50, and the male-to-female ratio is almost equal.

The WHO's official definition of "gaming disorder" includes:

1. A pattern of behavior for at least 12 months in which gaming is out of control
  2. The pattern of behavior must show an "increased priority given to gaming" to the point that gaming "takes precedence over other interests and daily activities."
  3. A "continuation or escalation of gaming despite the occurrence of negative consequences," or behavior that affects one's relationships, education, or occupation. This could mean that a teenager may play video games instead of doing homework and end up failing a test.
- Child and adolescent psychiatrist Victor Fornari, MD, sees many families who struggle to control the amount of time their children spend in front of a screen. "A family usually has rules about TV time. Here, a child wouldn't stop, despite the promise of negative consequences," he says.

An estimated 160 million American adults play video games
Fornari says aggressive games involving

WHO Calls 'Gaming Disorder' A Mental Health Condition

Compiled And Edited By John T. Robbins, Southern Daily Editor

teamwork and killing enemies tend to be the most addictive for young people. He also says some games have become so popular that schools around the world are warning parents to monitor their child's access to them.

Including gaming disorder in the ICD-11 could mean health insurance coverage for people seeking treatment.

"I think the ICD-11 category will give us a chance to learn how to identify and diagnose the disorder. Now that there's an ICD-11 code, health care providers will be able to ask for reimbursement from health insurance companies," Fornari says.

People who do seek help right now likely find it difficult. Fornari says that there are few treatment programs around because mental health professionals really don't know how to treat the disorder yet. Rehab centers and wilderness camps exist, but there is little proof of how well they work, and they are often expensive. He says it is unclear if gaming disorder will require treatment similar to other mental disorders or addictions.

"You always have to wonder when someone's behavior is obsessive. It's possible that someone with obsessive-compulsive disorder would compulsively play the game, but they would likely show other compulsions as well, like checking things, counting things, and washing hands," Fornari says.

Doubts About Defining the Condition
Some experts are reluctant to include gaming disorder in the ICD.

The Society for Media Psychology and Technology, a division of the American Psychological Association, said in a statement that the "current research base is not sufficient" enough to classify the disorder.

It argues that although video game addiction research has been going on for nearly 30 years, it's not clear how to define the condition, the symptoms, how common it is, or if it is an independent disorder or a symptom of a pre-existing disorder.

The European Games Developer Federation (EGDF) also criticized the move. The group said in a statement it was "concerned" by the WHO's action to include it, "despite significant opposition from the medical and scientific community. The evidence for its inclusion remains highly contested and inconclusive."

In the U.S., the American Psychological

Association has proposed adding gaming disorder to the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM-5). Although it's not yet an official condition, the association recognizes the following symptoms:

- Heavy focus on Internet gaming
- Withdrawal symptoms when Internet gaming is taken away (sadness, anxiety, irritability)
- Tolerance, the need to spend more time gaming
- Not being able to play less, unsuccessful attempts to quit playing
- Giving up other activities, and loss of interest in activities that were once enjoyed
- Continuing to play despite problems
- Deceiving family members or others about the amount of time spent on Internet gaming
- The use of Internet gaming to relieve negative moods, such as guilt or hopelessness
- Risk, having jeopardized or lost a job or relationship due to Internet gaming

To be diagnosed with gaming disorder, a patient must have at least five of the listed symptoms.

In a 2017 study done in the U.S., United Kingdom, Canada, and Germany, close to 19,000 gamers completed a survey about symptoms of gaming disorder. More than 65% of participants did not report any symptoms of gaming disorder. Only 2.4% of the sample endorsed at least five of the symptoms needed to be diagnosed. In a commentary on that study, Patrick M. Markey, PhD, a psychology professor at Villanova University, and Christopher J. Ferguson, PhD, department chairman of psychology at Stetson University, questioned gaming disorder as a condition.

"Current data suggest that the proposed Internet gaming disorder category is a poor indicator of actual problems," they wrote. "Therefore, its use in clinical settings, as presently delineated, may ultimately cause more harm than good."

They also asked why the DSM-5 singles out gaming disorder as a proposed category, but not other things that could be addictive, including working, exercising, or eating.

In a 2017 study of gamers, only 2.4% of the participants had at least five of the symptoms needed to be diagnosed with a gaming disorder.

"This important study suggests that video game addiction might be a real thing, but it is not the epidemic that some have made it out to be."

Fornari says the WHO action will bring about research on diagnosed cases that will help doctors understand more about the condition.

"I think any time changes like this occur, an initial period of time will be needed to test it out," he says. "How often the diagnosis is made and the range of clinical cases, like in any other mental disorder, will have to be studied. When a new disorder is proposed, we need to see if it will survive the test of time." (Courtesy webmd.com)
