40% Of China's Marriages Ending After Three Years

Compiled And Edited By John T. Robbins, News&Review Editor

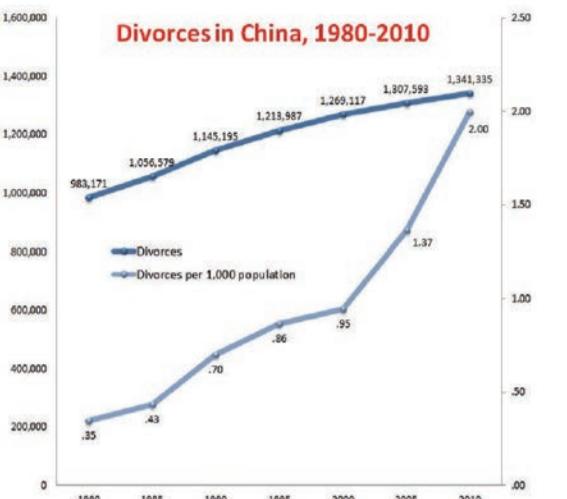

Liu Xiang and Ge Tian shared this photo on the star hurdler's Tencent Weibo and Ge's Sina Weibo accounts. Their divorce shocked many in China.

The divorce rate in China increased by 3.9 percent in 2014 over the previous year, with 3.63 million couples going their separate ways, according to the latest data released by the Ministry of Civil Affairs. The rate has been rising for 12 consecutive years since 2003.

Among the couples filing for divorce, 40 percent of them took the step after married for just three years.

Statistics when broken down also reveal that the couples born in the 1980s constitute the main part of the divorced. The retired star hurdler Liu Xiang's divorce sparked a heated debate among the Internet users just days ago. Liu was born in 1983.

and the society is also becoming increasingly tolerant of divorcees. More unhappy couples choose to divorce to give themselves a second chance at happiness.

The steadily rising divorce rate is not something unique to China. Data released by Japan's Ministry of Health, Labor and Welfare in early 2015 showed that the divorce rate in the country was 1.77, or 1.77 out of 1,000 couples, taking the sixth spot and just ahead of Italy, which had 0.91 rate. The other top six countries were Russia, the US, Germany, Britain and France with the divorce rate of 4.5, 3.6, 2.19, 2.05 and 1.97 respectively.

What's more, high divorce rate doesn't necessarily mean modern people lose faith in marriage because though many choose to remarry, governments rarely keep track of the remarriage rate.

demolition compensation, more homes or evading the husband-and-wife common debts may also account for the rising divorce rate. Statistics show that 14,574 more couple were divorced in 2010 in the eastern city of Nanjing than the previous year after house purchase restrictions took effect in October of 2010 capping the maximum number of houses a couple can own.

Besides, modern people have high expectations and more emotional demands for marriage, but fail to develop more skills to bridge the long-existing communication gap between women and men as articulated in the book Men Are From Mars, Women Are From Venus. Adding that women are becoming more independent financially

"China Is An Emerging Market For Live Western Music"

Historic Blue Note Jazz Club Plans Expansion Into China

Compiled And Edited By John T. Robbins, News&Review Editor

JAZZ in CHINA

jazz scene is growing.

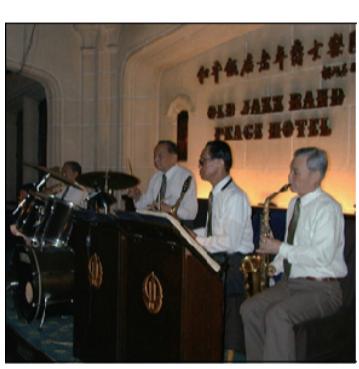

"It's definitely evolved in terms of musicianship and the amount of original music being produced," said Lawrence Ku, a Chinese-American guitarist based in Shanghai, who previously lived in Beijing. "There are many more younger musicians now that can really play, that really have a handle on the language."

With the arrival of a Blue Note, jazz audiences will have access to a higher tier of artists, with the booking and talent buying done from the company's office in New York.

"We feel it is only through the introduction of the pinnacle of jazz performances that we are able to foster growth within the local jazz scene and the next generation of Chinese jazz musicians," Bao Zhong Lun, the general manager of Winbright Culture and Media, says in an email. "It is through the Blue Note Jazz Clubs that we aim to generate a more widespread social and cultural recognition of jazz music among music fans in China."

"China is an emerging market for live Western music," said Steven Bensusan, the president of Blue Note Entertainment, whose other properties include the Highline Ballroom and B. B. King Blues Club & Grill. "We'll be on the forefront of helping to build that market. It's something that we're in a unique position to do."

Blue Note Beijing, scheduled to open in March, will occupy a 16,000-square-foot basement space in a neo-Classical building near Tiananmen Square. Built in 1903 as Beijing's first American Embassy, it was later home to the Dalai Lama, and more recently to the upscale French restaurant Maison Boulud. The club, now undergoing a $5 million renovation, will present two shows a night, Tuesday through Sunday.

The perennial challenges for a promoter in the islands are geography and demographics: Unlike Beijing or Tokyo, Hawaiian cities have a small resident population, which intensifies the need to court tourist groups. But the support of local fans and musicians will also be key.

It seems likely that the club's programming will make some provision for Hawaiian music, especially given the crossover success of slack-key guitar, a popular local genre. Blue Note Hawaii would be a natural fit for someone like Jake Shimabukuro, a local-born ukulele ace who draws from jazz fusion and has a large following in Japan.

"I know once we get established in China, we'll probably see an upturn in Chinese tourists in New York," Mr. Bensusan said. "And I think it's going to be a great thing for jazz in general." (Courtesy nytimes.com)

Blue Note Entertainment's partner in China is a unit of Beijing Winbright Investment Group. The unit, the Winbright Culture and Media Company, specializing in the entertainment and hospitality industries, will also be a partner in two more Blue Note clubs, set to open in the next few years in Shanghai and Taipei.

Beijing has a handful of small but well-regarded jazz clubs, notably the East Shore Live Jazz Café, founded by the saxophonist Liu Yinan, a former sideman to China's original rock star, Cui Jian. And the
