Nearly 1,800 families separated at U.S.-Mexico border in 17 months

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Nearly 1,800 immigrant families were separated at the U.S.-Mexico border from October 2016 through February of this year, according to a senior government official, as President Donald Trump implemented stricter border enforcement policies.

The numbers are the first comprehensive disclosure by the administration of how many families have been affected by the policies. Previously, the only numbers provided by federal officials on family separations covered a single two-week period in May.

The government official, who agreed to speak only on condition of anonymity, said he could not provide up-to-date statistics, but acknowledged the number of separations had risen sharply in recent weeks, largely because of new administration policies.

In May, U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced a 'zero tolerance' policy in which all those apprehended entering the United States illegally would be criminally charged, which generally leads to children being separated from their

A U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) official testified last month to Congress that between May 6 and May 19, 658 children were separated from 638 parents because of the stepped-up prosecutions. That brings the total of officially acknowledged separations to more than 2,400, though that does not include recent weeks or the period from March 1 to

Immigration and child advocates, Democratic lawmakers and the United Nations have all condemned the practice of separating families at the border, but the administration has defended its actions saying it is protecting children and making clear that illegal border crossers will be prosecuted regardless of their family circumstances.

In most of the 1,768 cases of families separated by border agents between October 2016 and February, children were removed from parents for medical reasons or because of security concerns, the official said, citing examples such as parents needing hospitalization or officials discovering the parent had a criminal record either in the United States or in their home country.

In 237 cases, the official said, children were removed because border agents suspected adults were falsely posing as the parents of minors in their charge.

U.S. celebrity chef Anthony Bourdain, host of CNN's food-and-travel-focused "Parts Unknown" television series, killed himself in a French hotel room, officials said on Friday, in the second high-profile suicide of a U.S. celebrity this week. He was 61.

Bourdain, whose career catapulted him from washing dishes at New York restaurants to dining in Vietnam with President Barack Obama, hanged himself in a hotel room near Strasbourg, France, where he had been working on an upcoming episode of his program, CNN said.

Investigators were treating the death in Kaysersberg, France, as a suicide, local prosecutor Christian de Rocquigny said in a telephone interview.

His death comes three days after American designer Kate Spade, who built a fashion empire on her signature handbags, was found dead of suicide in her New York apartment on Tuesday.

Suicide rates rose in nearly every U.S. state from 1999 to 2016, according to data from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention on Thursday. Nearly 45,000 people committed suicide in 2016, making it one of three leading causes of death that are on the rise, along with Alzheimer's disease and drug overdoses.

approach to prevention, including boosting economic support by states, supporting family and friends after a suicide, and identifying and supporting those at risk.

Bourdain climbed the culinary career ladder to become executive chef at New York's former Brasserie Les Halles restaurant.

His fame began to grow exponentially in 1999 when the New Yorker magazine published his article "Don't Eat Before Reading This," which he developed into the 2000 book, "Kitchen Confidential: Adventures in the Culinary Underbelly."

Brash and opinionated, he also spoke openly about his use of drugs and addiction to heroin earlier in his life.

He went on to host television programs, first on the Food Network and the Travel Channel, before joining CNN in "His love of great adventure, new friends, fine food and drink and the remarkable stories of the world made him a unique storyteller," the network said in a statement. "His talents never ceased to amaze us."

Bourdain told the New Yorker in 2017 that his idea for "Parts Unknown," which was in its 11th season, was traveling, eating and doing whatever he wanted. The show roamed from out-of-the-way restaurants to the homes of locals, providing what the magazine called "communion with a foreign culture so unmitigated that it feels practically intravenous."

What it costs to get married in Texas

By Daniela Sternitzky-Di

A new report by WeddingWire — a website that simplifies the wedding planning process by allowing couples to find tools and resources all in one place — found that the national average cost of a wedding is about $36,000. According to the report, the total includes the engagement ring, the ceremony/reception, and the honeymoon, with the ceremony/reception taking up the bulk of the cost at an average of $27,000.

For those getting married in Texas, couples can expect to pay just a few thousand dollars under the national average according to a study by popular wedding website, The Knot. The Knot's report looked at 2017 numbers and came up with the average costs for weddings across the nation, and for the Lone Star State that range was in the low $30,000. According to the WeddingWire report, for major cities like Houston, or Dallas-Ft. Worth the range was between $28 - $25,000. A lot goes into planning a wedding, and just because the number may seem daunting it doesn't mean that without the proper planning and saving you can't have the wedding of your dreams.

Katy tops list of places to retire in Texas

Katy led the state of Texas as the best place to retire, a SmartAsset study showed, with a plentiful amount of doctors' offices and recreation centers elevating it to the top.

SmartAsset, a financial technology company and website, determined the ranking by examining three factors that affect the quality of life: income and sales taxes, the number of doctors' offices and opportunity for recreation and social life.

The top 10 list also included the Houston area cities of Richmond (6), Tomball (7), Webster (8) and Humble (9).

Katy had 17.6 doctors' offices per 1,000 to SmartAsset: people, compared with 7.3 in Richmond, 8.8 in Tomball, 13.3 in Webster and 8.4 in Humble. It had 3.6 recreation centers per 1,000 people, compared with 0.2 in Richmond, 0.4 in Tomball, 0.1 in Webster and 0.4 in Humble.

Fredricksburg, No. 5 on the list, had the highest percentage of seniors at 30 percent of the population. Among the top cities, Tomball had the biggest share of seniors in the Houston region at 18 percent of the population. Seniors made up less than 12 percent of the population in Katy, Humble and Webster.

BUSINESS

When Canopy Growth opened its first cannabis factory in an old chocolate plant near Ottawa four years ago, it did so predicting a bright future. Canadahad already legalized medical marijuana, and Canopy predicted full legalization for recreational use to be next.

What the company hadn't predicted, however, was the sudden flood of foreign visitors. Politicians and police authorities from Jamaica, Germany, Denmark, the Netherlands, Greece and Australia have all come knocking, as well as doctors from New Zealand, Brazil and Chile, along with groups of corporate investors and bankers – so many that Canopy now sometimes splits up the groups according to their birthdays.

"We knew we'd have to give a lot of tours, so we just cut a window into the wall," said the company spokesman, Jordan Sinclair. "We put windows in all of the doors."

Canada will be thrust even more directly under the international microscope on Thursday, when a vote in the Senate is expected to ratify Bill C-45, effectively making Canada the first G20 nation to legalize recreational marijuana to be a bit of a science fiction experience for a while," said Benedikt

Fischer, an expert on substance use at Toronto's biggest psychiatric hospital. "It's unique in the world, because it's happening for the first time in a wealthy country. It's not like in the US, where there are these state experiments. Most people kind of ignore Uruguay. And so the world is really looking at this."

Governments, researchers and business leaders around the world all have their own reasons for keeping tabs. Legalization could affect Canada's crime patterns, health and countless other factors - but exactly how, no one yet knows.

Each Canadian province plans to roll out its newly legalized market in a slightly different way, creating about a dozen mini-laboratories within one massive test

Even places that have already taken the legalization plunge are hoping Canada will solve some mysteries. After Colorado legalized marijuana five years ago, for example, organized crime reacted by ramping up supplies of "black tar heroin, opiates and harder drugs", said Dr Larry Wolk, the state's top public health official.

market. Any new mix of illicit drugs in the country could have new effects on public health. "What's the impact of marijuana legalization on the opioid crisis?" he asked as an example. "Does it actually act as a substitute so that people can get off opiates for chronic pain? Is there a positive impact? Or is it a negative impact, because as a result there's more opiates in the black market? Is [pot] a gateway? We don't really

But Wolk have an answer." savs he is

One delicate balance for Canadian authorities has been guessing at what kind of pricing will be low enough to eradicate illicit sales – yet not so low as to entice new users. Canada's finance minister, Bill Morneau, recently said the goal is "keeping cannabis out of the hands of kids and out of the black market. That means keeping the taxes low so we can actually get rid of the criminals in the system".

One sign of success will be if Canada not only discourages underground sales, but converts illicit sellers to the new system, said Tim Boekhout van Solinge, a Dutch criminologist.

"What I am mainly following ... is who will be the new legal growers, and whether authorities manage to get some of the illegal growers to become legal growers,"

Each country around debated has whether relax cannabis laws has had its own priority in mind: from generating revenue to discouraging drug cartels. In Canada, the emphasis has been largely on public health. Cannabis will be sold in fairly plain packaging, and usually through government-run boards that already control liquor sales.

"It won't be like buying Budweiser or branded alcoholic products," said Steve Rolles of Transform, a UK drug policy thinktank. "It's going to be more like buying pharmaceuticals from a chemist." Still, it's hard to know whether Canada, or any similar western country, will be able to stick to that public-health focus, he said. "We have concerns ... that the lessons from alcohol and tobacco wouldn't be learned, and we might see overcommercialized markets in which profit-making entities would seek to encourage more use and could encourage risky consumption behaviours," he said.

So far, Canada has allowed a few major players to dominate the industry, and their influence remains to be seen, said US marijuana industry expert Mark Kleiman.

"You don't want to build up big vested interests that then resist any change," he said. "If you have commercial industry in cannabis, they're going to end up writing the laws.'

For epidemiologists, Canada will provide best-ever data sets on cannabis use.

Colorado's health results have been encouraging, said Wolk. But overall, researchers lack solid data about cannabis use. Some key questions include addiction levels, how cannabis affects mental health, and effects on young people, said Israeli scientist Raphael Mechoulam, often called the "grandfather" of cannabis research.

"About 10% of the users may be addicted less than alcohol or tobacco," he said. "Some users, who are already prone to schizophrenia, may get the disease earlier." He said he is also keeping an eye on whether heavy use by young people may affect their central nervous system.

Another current Canadian health debate is how many people will be light, casual cannabis users, and how many will be heavy

The government still must decide how to approach products that are "very potent" in THC, the psychoactive compound in cannabis, said Mark Ware, a drug researcher and pain specialist who helped lead Canada's federal taskforce advising the new legislation. Black-market sellers have produced increasingly strong concentrates, he said.

"Those have not been the subject of studies up until recently, so the question of whether to regulate those, allow them in whatever context, and then be able to study their impacts on health, that would be very important," he said. But "once they're out there, it's very hard to put them back in the box again".

Canadian police, meanwhile, will grapple with how to crack down on cannabis-impaired driving. That's already a struggle around the world, regardless of marijuana's legality, said Rolles. But it's much more difficult to measure impairment from cannabis than from alcohol, and enforcing a legal limit will prove tricky.

Meanwhile, many investors have already made huge profits from cannabis stocks, and a big question for them is whether the bubble bursts – or the value keeps rising.

"They're waiting to see if the sky's going to fall," said Sinclair of Canopy. One of about 100 Canadian legal producers of medical cannabis, the company owns a third of the medical market, began trading on the Toronto stock exchange in 2016 and last month became the only cannabis producer on the New York stock exchange.

"[Investors] are waiting to see if all the stigma and all the demonization of this product that's built up in 90 years of prohibition is true," Sinclair said. "It's on us to demonstrate that it's not." (Courtesy https://www.theguardian.com)
